The Majestic Mix-Up

There was once a vast place that had two very distinct areas. On one side were snowy icicle-covered mountains, frozen lakes, and snowy pine trees and it was always misty and foggy. The other side was a wide hot desert of rolling black sand hills spotted with warm lakes. The sand was shiny and crystallized and there were glass cacti and snakes. There were dark clouds full of diamonds and gold and the sky always smelled of either grilled cheese or s'mores.

Growing throughout the world were rare and beautiful juice roses. They had lime green petals and million dollar bill leaves. They were 8 feet tall and difficult to get to, so you would have to work for the money. If you broke them in half you could drink their juice and if you kept squeezing them more money would come out. They spoke a special rose language that humans couldn't understand.

Living throughout the world were rainbow dinosaurs (who were nice) that would light up in the dark. They had long necks covered in diamonds. There were also pink and green dolphins who shot money out of their blow holes, fluffy fur dogs, and flying lion acrobats.

People swam in the strawberry-kiwi-watermelon soda oceans so they could stay alive forever. As the diamond and gold rain fell into the ocean it turned to gold whales and crystal dolphins. Swimming in the lemonade and apple juice rivers were blob fish and great cherry fish.

To get around people used big pink boats that could go underwater and had helicopter pads. Every boat was filled with tiny dolls called “plastics” who lounged around all over the place. The boats were well equipped with video games and giant tv screens and were all connected by a service called the “charlotte web.”

This world was home to Crystal the Diamond Queen. She was very beautiful and had a spiral horn that changed color based on her emotions and could shoot a laser that would make people good. Her afro was longer than her arms. She lived in a castle mansion on a moving island in the ocean, half of the mansion was glass and under water. She drove around a limo-submarine that had a screen that let her keep an eye on her mansion. Her mother passed on many special powers to her (invisibility, telekinesis, teleporting, x-ray vision, and crime prediction) and asked her to use them for good.

Working alongside Crystal was Dash Voyager, a doo-doo bird who could change gender. He wore a butterfly cape and a hat that let just a little tuft of hair stick out in front, he had a bad hairline and the rest of his head didn't have much hair. His feet turned to flippers because he lived in an underground cave and he had a hand that could quickly shoot out grappling ropes. He worked with Crystal to help people but was mostly motivated by his desire for fame and attention.

King Mazilla the Nightmare, a cyborg gorilla, was Crystal's nemesis. He was 20 feet tall, fluffy and black, had a pink nose and no heart, had a scarred face, and wore an eye patch to cover his laser eye. If you looked into that laser eye you would be turned into a tree. He had a home in a cave in an enchanted jungle that was only accessible through a secret portal. His goodness was taken by bullies and so he wanted everyone else to be bad, too. Secretly, he wanted his heart back.

King Mazilla's only friend was Eclipsa. She was beautiful and had a scar on her face and very pale skin except for black hands which she would hide with gloves. On each side of her head she had a set of eyes that were blue and purple and wore a red and black shoulder-length wig and a bodysuit made out of rags. She lived in an underground village and used her dark magic powers to control people's minds and to fly and change the size of things around her. She was bullied as a kid and wanted revenge so she would gobble people up to help her change into a pengwolf.

One day Crystal the Diamond Queen and Dash Voyager were out for a walk discussing how to keep their world safe. Little did they know that King Mazilla and Eclipsa were also out for a walk and were terrorizing people along the way. Mazilla and Eclipsa spotted Crystal and Dash and started to sneak up behind them...
