Jamello's Sweet World

There was once a gummy world where lots of things were made of candy. There was a chocolate rainforest made up of cupcake trees, fruit punch and blue soda waterfalls, and a snowcone tundra. The sour gummy people lived in gingerbread houses. There was also a money jungle, a gold forest, and a noodle swamp. This place often felt like you were in outer space because you could always see shooting stars, other planets, and the northern lights flashing through the lavender sky. There were frequent powerful hurricanes that caused the cotton candy clouds to rock out torrential downpours of sprinkles. But when the storms subsided a double rainbow would emerge and its face would convey the mood of the world. Circling constantly were satellite eagles and lots of hot air balloons that floated along on breezes that smelled a lot like cooking food.

Growing throughout the world in patches of chocolate dirt were a variety of trees- some that grew skittles and money, a special type of rock candy tree that produced sodas that regrew very quickly, and licorice plants with caramel centers and bubblegum leaves.

This unique world was home to many equally unique animals. There were purple and white mountain zebras, dark red wild wolves, tritonsauruses that were the size of 50 school buses, smooth-skinned colorful little creatures called lunaties who lived in the waterfalls, strawberry chocolate pigs who wandered around everywhere, and very special transparent horses.

The world was well-known for having the biggest chocolate milkshake lake ever called the Gulf of Milkshake. Traveling through the gulf could be treacherous because of the giant cookie-burgers. There was also a super big pink, blue, and red ocean that smelled like cotton candy.

There were lots of ways to get around including super-speed lightning bolt shoes (the more you had to spend on them, the faster the model), and hoverboards. People were also usually born with a natural ability to fly. And for very special trips there were magic time machine carpets.

This sweet world was home to Jamello who was nice and respectful. He lived in a hidden leaf village in the chocolate jungle. He had two faces on the front and back of his marshmallow head and a cinnamon roll body that he could unroll to become taller. His licorice arms could shoot out a sweet foam and he had x-ray vision. He was raised by his grandparents after The Dream Destroyer Twins captured his parents.

Living under the noodle swamp were Jamello's best friends The Skull Troopers who were a boy/girl team that shared a body (but could separate if they wanted). They had laser eyes, could freeze people with their breath, and could change their hair to fire or ice at will. They had many special powers including healing, super strength, people-shifting, and a great Thunderclap. They helped Jamello but have hopes of leaving behind sidekick life to be THE hero.

Astro and Astronomy were The Dream Destroyer Twins and were about 15 years old. Astronomy's long flowing hair looked like the galaxy but Astro kept his hair short. They lived in the jungle in a secret base temple surrounded by volcanos (it could not be found on a map). When they combined their power they could create energy booms with their fist bumps, cross their arms to bring things in from outer space, and could enter people's dreams and destroy them. They don't like Jamello because they think he banished their dream-destroying parents (who hadn't even spared their own children from their dream destroying) but really their parents were swept away because of their own mistake.

Zurton Kapow, the world's second strongest villain, was also not a fan of Jamello because of a previous battle. Their mutual distaste brought them together with The Dream Destroying Twins. Zurton had the ability to clone themselves so you never knew how many of them there might be. They lived underground in a black licorice cave with demonic gummy bears where they practiced their gymnastics. They had green spiky hair, a scar on their eye, four arms and two fingers which they used to drink, fangs, one lightning bolt eyeball that they could use to hypnotize people. They were also great at multi-tasking and could teleport.

One day Jamello and The Skull Troopers were out for a walk discussing how they might be able to find out what happened to Jamello's parents. Little did they know, The Dream Destroyer Twins and Zurton Kapow were lurking just behind them, plotting something mean!

Just then Jamello and The Skull Troopers heard...
